Mending The Circle

11th World Conference – International Institute for Restorative Practices
October 22, 2008
A process and orientation model developed for use with the Community Society, a systemically based Eurocentric organization, in Nova Scotia. There is an appreciation that the foundational approach of restorative justice is grounded in the histories of cultures who believe in collectively.
The session will provide participants with an opportunity to experience the process used to align four focus Africentric principles and four key focus restorative justice values. As well the presenter will share the orientation document which was developed for use with the Community Justice Society board members.
Unity is strength

Umoja ni nguvu (Swahili) -
I want to thank the Council on African Canadian Education (CACE) for the insight they demonstrated by establishing the Masters Cohort – Africentricity. It was through this venue of study, specifically my practicum study, that I was able to realize my vision of showcasing the connection of Africentricity with restorative justice and restorative practices.

Restorative Justice & Africentricity

“I am a long time, committed champion of the Society and the values and philosophy of Restorative Justice. It has been my commitment on an individual and personal level to demonstrate that values of RJ (embraced as CJ S values) and the principles of Africentricity can occur on a daily basis and transform the spaces where we reside”.
Restorative Justice & Africentricity

“The work undertaken by the Community Justice Society (CJS) resonates strongly with me. My involvement with the Society has been intimate and persistent over a decade. Throughout those 10 years plus, I have maintained a strong sense of support and commitment to the society. As I ask myself “Why”.
“I knew a sense of connectedness beyond the mere typical process of implementation of the work done by CJS to heal harm in the community. Once I saw the Africentric principles and looked at them in relation to the Restorative Justice values (embraced as CJS values), I had my “ah hah” moment.”
Let us begin with the introduction …

There is no strength without unity.
- Irish Proverb
Let us continue with the story …

Only when all contribute their firewood can they build up a strong fire.

- Let us engage in problem solving ...

“Walls go up, masks go on, misunderstandings escalate, as hearts harden and close. Unhealed wounds fester, causing bad feelings to eat away at people and destroy relationships. Millennia ago, the Gospel of St. Thomas named this danger: ‘If you fail to bring forth what is within you, what you fail to bring forth will destroy you.’

The Carver Model of governance enables the board to focus on the larger issues, to delegate with clarity, to control management’s job without meddling, to rigorously evaluate the accomplishments of the organization and to truly lead its organization.

Restorative Justice & Africentricity

“The Grass Won’t Grow Any More Quickly if You Pull at it”

African Proverb
“Kemetic leadership … [has] three qualities: Authoritative utterance is in thy mouth, perception is in thy heart, and they tongue is the shrine of justice. African leadership then is based on responsibility, admiration and love. People tend to select their leaders from among those who are admired and appreciated for their wisdom, sense of justice, and beneficial advise”

(Warfield-Coppack 1995 p.38)
The Afrocentric Organization is based on humanistic principles and comes from a traditional African worldview or perspective. In the African centred organizational perspective, “the affective approach to knowledge is epistemologically valid”. The worldview is polycentric and what is valued is being humanistic and people centred.

Policy Governance separates issues of organizational purpose (ENDS) from all other organizational issues (MEANS), placing primary importance on those Ends.
Restorative Justice & Africentricity

Ends are always about the changes for persons to be made outside the organization, along with their cost or priority.

Ends are about the organization's impact on the world (much like cost-benefit) that justify its existence.

They are result-based statements
